GAS PLANT.—Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.—Eugene Seeger, U. S. In order to develop the earning power, the capacity of the plant ought to be greatly enlarged and an electric plant ought to be added. The estimate of expenses for the necessary improvements amounts to about $3,000,000, which sum the company seems to be unable to raise here or in Belgium. The capital invested in the plant up to date is about $10,000,000, and the company's contract with the city expires in 45 years. The managers would be willing to transfer all their rights and privileges and the controlling interest of the property to an American syndicate which would undertake the necessary improvements, provided they could be accorded a fair share in the net earnings of a new company to be organized on that basis.
